why the study was done

In January, 2004, we attempted to introduce legislation in the 2004 session of Virginia's General Assembly. The legislation was to be sponsored by Senator H. Russell Potts and dealt with Virginia's pet overpopulation. Feeling that a study should precede and validate the proposed legislation, Senator Potts sponsored SJR37, a study which would be conducted during the course of the year, funded by Donald Marro, and worked on in conjunction with the State Veterinarian. The effort failed, or more accurately, was "passed by", so no action was taken on it.

A number of colleagues, upset at the complacency of the legislature regarding excess pet population in Virginia and the resulting deaths and cost to tax-payers, asked why we didn't do the study anyway. We did.

The study has long ago been started. Enough is complete to support the proposed initiatives which were circulated as Food for Thought. However, this is a study which should be the topic of a Task Force in Virginia as so many new questions have emerged when working on the original issues.

These topics below are thought to be the most significant in the study. However, other topics are part of the study and still under development, and some others should be included in a Phase II, or in work done by a Task Force.

statistics

The Humane Society of the United States, using statistics compiled from the American Pet Products Manufacturers Association (APPMA), reports that there are 65 million owned dogs and 77.6 million owned cats in the US.

sterilization statistics

Again from HSUS, 72% of owned dogs are spayed/neutered and 84% of owned cats are spay/neutered.

In Virginia, using figures from VDACS (Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services) for the most recent year (2003) reported, 60,625 dogs were euthanized and 73,175 cats were euthanized. In addition, there were 1,238 dogs and 1,986 cats which "died in the facility", meaning they were not euthanized but they died while in custody of public facilities, and the agony of their last days can only be imagined. In summary, 61,863 dogs and 75,161 cats entered the system alive, and left the system dead in 2003 alone. Nearly sixty-two thousand dogs. Seventy-five thousand cats.

If it is accurate that 72% of dogs (and 84% of cats) are sterile, the question is why there are still more dogs/cats than homes. Current thinking says having a sterilization rate near 70% creates “equilibrium” – i.e., a balance between the births of dogs and cats and enough homes to welcome them. However, if the sterilization rate is even higher than the theoretical 70% equilibrium level and there is still no “equilibrium”, then the only plausible explanation is that too much breeding has defeated the theoretical equilibrium point which must now be higher than 70% or 72%.

If it is not accurate that 72% of dogs (and 84% of cats) are sterile, then we must determine what level of s/n and what amount of “breeder product” (i.e., puppies and kittens) is necessary to achieve equilibrium.

Where do the dogs and cats come from?

According to APPMA figures from the HSUS, only 18% of dogs (and 16% of cats) come from an animal shelter/pound/humane society.

Statistics frequently used report that 30% of dogs in Virginia’s system (pounds, shelters, and rescues) are purebreds.

This means that the remaining 70% in pounds/shelters/rescues are from owned dogs that were bred, but are not purebreds.

And the 30% of pound/shelter/rescue dogs that are purebred come from breeders without effective contracts regarding responsible ownership of the puppies they produce, and/or the breeder has declined responsibility for the unwanted puppies they produced and sold.

The goal is to achieve equilibrium without killing the excess as a way to control overpopulation.

This will happen when the number born is equal to the number that may be absorbed by responsible owners.

Using figures for 2003 from VDACS, 38,416 dogs and 29,758 cats were adopted from pounds/shelters/rescues.

If 38,416 dogs which were adopted is 18% of the total number of dogs, then the total number of dogs placed or sold was 213,422 in 2003.

The 213,422 dogs placed or sold in 2003 is an unacceptably high total since, for example, 45,309 dogs were given up by their owners, and 48,484 of strays were not reunited with their owners.

And 60,625 of the dogs in Virginia's system in 2003 were killed.

Clearly, many more dogs (and cats) were produced than there were homes to take them and keep them.

information collected by Virginia and received from Virginia

The State Veterinarian collects companion animal data from all counties, cities, humane/SPCA groups, and rescues annually. The state then each year creates a report called the Statewide Summary Report. Attached are the reports for 2000, 2001, 2002, and 2003.

The data lacks integrity. We found that the numbers are not consistently calculated by reporting entity. For instance, some places do not count pit bulls and some places do not count owner give-ups for euthanasia.

We also found that some places including some large ones simply do not report at all.

The 2003 report is online from the VDACS (Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services) website; this is the third version of that report. In reviewing the original report, we noted calculation errors, reported that to VDACS, and subsequently VDACS put out a second version. We later also alerted VDACS to various entities which had not reported their information to the state. We were told yet another version of 2003 Statewide Summary Report would be created. That third version is now online and is the report we have used in this study. It is also the version in the appendix below.

To get state totals, reporting entities fill out a form. We FOIAed all the individual reports (reports from each county, city/town, humane society, and rescue) from 2000 to 2003 and VDACS graciously provided all that data to us, copying the original documents they had received. As a result, we have the information available for each reporting entity from 2000 forward and will be willing to share that information with you, or alternatively, you may seek it directly from VDACS. The categories of information that a county sends in, for example, mirror the categories on the final state total, so you are able to see how many dogs were euthanized in a given year in a given facility, how many died in the runs (a different category than the number euthanized), how many were adopted, how many were stray, and so on.

Note that there is no category in the VDACS reporting that asks about breed of dog (or cat), or its source, i.e., pet store, breeder, or backyard breeder.

Note further that the absence of uniform and comprehensive reporting means there has been no provable improvement in kill rates since 2000 when the reported kill number for dogs was 70,667, in 2001 was 65,315, was 59,396 in 2002, and in 2003 was 60,625.

Virginia code requires that facilities submit their animal records to the state. It is not clear how those who do not report, or who report with gross errors, are handled.

HSUS does not have statistics for Virginia, and so those provided by VDACS are the only numbers available.

cats

Cats are not protected by Virginia law in the same way as are dogs. Publicly funded pounds are not required to take cats.

On April 7, 2004, we sent an email was sent to Dr. Butts, the State Veterinarian at VDACS:

“ Please tell me if a pound – a facility funded by Virginia – is out of compliance if it has no provision for cats.”

On the following day, Dr. David Cardin, the Deputy State Veterinarian, responded for Dr. Butts:

“ Sec. 3.1-796.96, Code of Virginia states:

‘A. The governing body of each county or city shall maintain or cause to be maintained a pound and shall require DOGS (capital letters from Dr. Cardin) running at large....to be contained therein. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the confinement of other companion animals in such a pound.’”

Dr. Cardin continued: “I am not aware of any other Code citation which addresses facility provisions for cats.”

We followed up with an email to Dr. Cardin on April 13, 2004:

“A county pound does not have to provide for companion animals other than dogs, and you sent me the legal language about that.

However, what if someone brings cats, or if cats are found to be abandoned, in those jurisdictions without provision for cats. What is legally acceptable to be done with the cats? What do you know to be typically done in such circumstances? ”

This email was not answered.

Using the information we received from VDACS with a FOIA, we were able to determine which public pounds do not accept cats. That list is an attachment to this document. We are still collecting information on the status of cats.

To illustrate further the plight of cats, see the attachment (Animal Records) described earlier in this document. Note that the number of cats that “die in the facility ” (different than “euthanized”) and the number of cats euthanized is significantly higher than for dogs. Left unquantified is the number of cats killed inhumanely because pounds/shelters do not accept them.

When VDACS was asked earlier this year if there was a list of facilities using gas chambers to euthanize dogs and cats, we were told there was no such list. However, VDACS offered that a page of the Inspection Report which is filled out when a facility, public or private, is inspected by VDACS, does have a category in the report regarding gas chambers.

VDACS generously offered to copy that portion of each Inspection Report so use of gas could be determined.

Between 25 and 28 facilities in Virginia have gas chambers. Because of changes in management of some facilities, the number is not exact. The information we have from VDACS regarding gas chambers is also attached to this document.

It has been suggested that the rationale for continuing the use of gas chambers is two-fold. In the one hand, it has been suggested that gas is cheaper. It is also suggested that in places where there is only one person involved in animal control work, a gas chamber is easier to use than other methods of euthanasia.

Another reason for using gas is a result of not understanding alternatives. The preferred method of euthanasia appears to be I/V, but some have declined moving to I/V for euthanasia because it was assumed that I/V euthanasia was administered by drip, much as a human gets it while lying in bed in a hospital.

Please note that Dr. David E. Cardin, the Deputy State Veterinarian of Virginia, is quoted in an article in the Chesterfield Observer of 8/11/04, in discussing the use of gas chambers versus injection, the "injection is the preferred method of euthanasia, according to the AVMA", but "Virginia allows it, because the AVMA says it's an acceptable method of euthanasia."

Supporters of gas chambers contend that proper use of gas chambers is humane. However, there is no end of horrible and mind-searing stories about the use of gas chambers to kill dogs and cats, horrible either because of improper use, or because gas chambers are not intrinsically humane.

In addition, the liability any jurisdiction has to employees and volunteers working with an improperly functioning chamber is tremendous.

inspection reports

While the focus of this study is on publicly funded facilities, all custodial facilities in Virginia – facilities which keep dogs and cats - are to be inspected but the frequency of inspection is not provided for by law.

Public (and private) facilities range from those in close to complete compliance with the law to those in flagrant violation of and disregard for Virginia's animal laws.

Currently, inspections and failures of inspection have virtually no consequences. Inspectors are empowered to levy civil fines for a facility which is in violation of Virginia law. In reality, only one civil fine (for $139K) has been levied since the law has been in effect, and of the $139K, only $1K has been paid by the violating jurisdiction.

Using the same source of information that was used in compiling the list of places having gas chambers, a list of inspections conducted was compiled.

The lists attached (one chronological and one alphabetical) indicate the date of the last inspection by VDACS. This information was provided by the state and is good as of 6/3/04. It is likely that a few inspections have been conducted since that date.

Note that some facilities have not been inspected since January, 2002, and some, from records provided by the state, have not been inspected at all.

Evaluations of the inspection reports is difficult as several variations of reporting forms are used, inspectors do not necessarily indicate conditions in the same manner, and some categories are checked as done without visual confirmation of that particular category. A cover letter, written to the jurisdiction after an inspection, is often misleading regarding the contents of the actual inspection report, letting non-compliant jurisdictions feel they have received a very good report when that may not be the case.

The ads which appear in newspapers, the majority being in the Sunday edition of a daily paper, provide insight into just how big a business selling dogs and cats is, with many places to buy dogs and cats.

For our July meetings, we took a single issue of the Washington Post, that of Sunday, 7/11/04, and looked at the dogs for sale.

Some of this information was presented at our July meetings, but we have revisited the numbers. The spread sheet is attached.

On that day, 258 breeders advertised between 1200 and 1600 dogs for sale, the exact number being uncertain since litter sizes were often unspecified. Unless it specified the number, we counted the ad as offering four dogs (half the number HSUS states is a typical litter size).

In some ads, the price was provided. Where it was not, we either took an average of the prices for that breed, or used $750 if there was no advertised price for that breed of dog. Breeds without any price were all specialty breeds for which the actual price may have been higher.

Assuming each dog advertised was sold, the total amount would represent $527,176.25. Each dog on average would have sold for $625.

Looking at the Virginia Pilot on Sunday, 6/27/04, 218 dogs and 40 cats were advertised for sale. Looking at that same paper from 11/2003 through 6/2004 revealed that ads were from sellers in 15 different states, with 3026 ads from Virginia-based sellers and 714 ads from North Carolina-based sellers.

The most likely assumption, supported by the requirement for cash in many ads, is that virtually all these sales go unreported for income tax purposes, and it is assumed that few, if any, of these sellers have a business license. If in fact 100% of these sales are off the books, then a significant amount of revenue is not being taxed.

Taking it a step further, dogs move into Virginia's pound/shelter/rescue system without accountability of the seller/producer, and a large percentage of these sales result in dogs/cats (or their progeny) being in the public pounds of Virginia at great expense to the taxpayers of Virginia.

This aspect of the study warrants further work. We have now subscribed to over 40 papers published in Virginia to continue to investigate these sales. Not only is it important to ultimately determine how much revenue is uncollected, but it is important to see if other states are contributing to Virginia's overpopulation, if other states are contributing to transmission of disease by transporting dogs over the Virginia state line without veterinarian check for health, and by determining whether these facilities, private or not, which have custody of dogs which are commercial breeding stock in Virginia, have been inspected by the State Veterinarian.

In addition, the study could continue pursuing this avenue by studying sales via the Internet.

Why is an analysis of advertising significant?

because if all dogs were licensed, for example, at $25 each, and if Virginia has 3% of the 65 million owned dogs in the US, license revenues would be $50 million per annum;

and if all 213,422 dogs sold in Virginia in 2003 were taxed at 6.5%, then some $8.5 million in tax revenues would be collected ($213,422 \times $600$ average price per dog \times 6.5%);

and if all breeders were licensed, for example, at $500 each, and if Virginia has 2000 breeders, breeder license revenues would be $1.0 million.

Taken together, the $59.5 million raised from dog licenses, breeder licenses, and sales tax would be enough to pay to spay/neuter all dogs in Virginia (based on an average surgery cost of $40 per animal and assuming 28% of all owned dogs are intact per HSUS) plus pay for all operating expenses of public pounds (approximately $32 million).

animal control budgets

animal control officers

As a step in getting budget information an attempt to determine the number of ACOs employed by each jurisdiction has been made. As of early August, 2004, we believe there are some 378 animal control officers employed by Virginia's various jurisdictions.

funding

We contacted each county, city, and/or town, to determine the amount of money spent on animal control in the most recent fiscal year.

In each jurisdiction, an attempt was made to determine what portion of the budget of animal control was used for prevention – i.e., spay/neuter. To date, none has been found.

We have found only a few jurisdictions report funds ($130,307) in their budgets as dedicated to s/n programs. However, on closer inspection, it appears those funds are from sources such as adoption and surgery fees collected by those adopting as well as funds from animal friendly license plate sales.

The issue is made more problematic since, in several cases, revenues from animal friendly car licenses appear to be mixed into the general budget of a given county, giving the appearance of coming from the tax base of that jurisdiction.

The same has been found to be true in several instances where fees from adopters both for the animal and for the cost of that animal's sterilization appear to be funds coming from the tax base to pay for s/n rather than from funds generated by a portion of the public that pays to adopt and pays the sterilization fee for the adopted animal.

In addition, some jurisdictions have received license plate funding but are unable to report what has happened to the money, or say the money was used but not on s/n.

As of our overall calculations in August, 2004, Virginia spends nearly $32 million state-wide on animal control and impoundment. Note that the $32 million accounted for already does not include depreciation on buildings, mortgage interest, building maintenance, or capital improvements.

We have not been able to determine that there is a single jurisdiction spending taxpayer funds on prevention of the pet overpopulation problem, but only spending taxpayer funds to control the result.

additional study topics and their status

There are many topics which are under study as part of this effort, and there are other important topics which have not yet been attempted.

Here are study topics underway:

what happens with cats at pounds which do not accept them voting records of members of the General Assembly over time regarding animal issues methods of identifying and tracking dogs/cats unique/successful s/n programs in VA unique/successful s/n programs out of state

breeder licensing/regulations outside VA

ACOs: total employed; time on job, job turnover and reasons for leaving job; training; background used to determine fitness for employment with animals identification of all rescue and animal welfare groups focusing on companion animals in Virginia

Here are study topics not yet started:

breeders in Virginia; identify individual breeders and also breeder groups

how does AKC (and other registries) impact overpopulation what registries exist in addition to AKC and how do they differ breeder contracts, placement procedures, return policies puppy mills and pet stores status of rabbits and other exotic companion animals identification of veterinarians participating in low cost/high volume s/n programs

identify public pounds with no corresponding humane society/spca/rescue in support of the animals

TNR programs in the state

identify public facilities with no computer access, resulting in at least an inability to list animals on Petfinder programs to provide veterinarians tax credit or other compensation for participation in low cost/high volume s/n programs results of the animal task force of 1999/2000 canvass each animal welfare group in Virginia and determine what is being done by their group re s/n determine ethical and behavioral guidelines that public or private facilities provide to their employees and volunteers regarding acceptable conduct toward custodial animals sources of s/n funding from large animal-focused organizations or large employers
